Colonial Secretary's Office,
Lagos, 22nd March, 1902.

His Excellency the Governor directs the publication for general information of the following Report by the Government Chemist on samples of water received from Epe examined by him.

By Command,

HENRY REEVE,
Acting Colonial Secretary.

Water from Epe.

3 samples of water drawn by Dr. Macfarlane at Epe on 29th January, 1902, were received in the Laboratory on 31st January.

They were in ordinary quart bottles, but the corks were suspicious since they were not new and all had a peculiar odour.

No. 1. Lagoon water, used principally for bathing.

No. 2. The Stream (Otinyen), used for drinking.

No. 3. Well water, from Lagoon side.

No. 1. was slightly yellow in colour, while the other two were colourless, and faintly acid to litmus.

Microscopically the sediments showed sand, and vegetable matter with a few infusoria in Nos. 1 and 2.

The results of analysis were :—

PARTS PER 100,000—BY WEIGHT.

	1.	2.	3
Total Solids	9.5	4.0	3.0
Ammonia Free	.004	.003	.003
" Albuminoid	.055	.024	.634
Chlorine	1.1	.5	.45
Nitrogen as nitrates	.05	.05	.02
Nitrous Anhydride	.01	.009	.0075
Oxygen Consumed	.56	.44	.56

Of these results, the Albuminoid Ammonia and Oxygen Consumed are the only ones abnormally high, pointing to presence of vegetable matter, but as the corks used in bottling the samples were themselves not above suspicion, the degree of pollution of the water in bulk may be very much less, and I am therefore of opinion that the above waters with the exception of No. 1 are suitable (using the customary precautions against accidental contamination) for drinking and other domestic purposes.

General News.

JANUARY, 17.

The Oloja and Oshogbos of Ikorodu sent their newly appointed Balogun, Kale, with credentials and a good number of followers to wait on the Governor and bid His Excellency welcome on his safe return to the Colony. The Messengers also informed His Excellency that the Oloja and Oshogbos of Ikorodu had long been waiting for the Governor's return, as they desired to crave His Excellency's assistance in several matters relating to the management of their town. The Oloja and Oshogbos desired them to lay before the Governor their complaint about the people of Ikorodu being now required to take all their cases to Shagamu for hearing. This was a great hardship on a good number of old people who could not conveniently undertake the journey. The Oloja and the Oshogbos would therefore respectfully ask that cases be tried in Ikorodu as heretofore, more especially as the District Commissioner was residing there with them. The messengers were also desired to state that the stipends of the late Balogun and the Oshogbos had not been paid for some time now; and that the Oloja and the Oshogbos would be grateful if His Excellency would direct that these stipends be regularly paid, in addition to the arrears now due.

The messengers were also instructed to present to the Governor the Balogun, Kale, who during His Excellency's absence from the Colony was appointed Balogun in the place of the late Jasimi.

The Governor thanked the messengers for their kind message of welcome from the Oloja and the Oshogbos, and enquired about the welfare of the people of Ikorodu, the health of the town, and their progress in farming. His Excellency also promised to consult with the District Commissioner of Ikorodu about their complaints.

The messengers in reply informed the Governor that they had a good crop from their farms in the preceding year. There was plenty of maize, and their palm trees were flourishing. They had also planted a good quantity of Kola trees. There were very few cases of small pox or of fever. The people were on the whole living in peace.

The Governor was very pleased to learn about their condition and told them that he was importing £50 worth of kola nuts from the Gold Coast. These would be raised at Olokemeji, and the plants would afterwards be distributed among the different Chiefs for cultivation. In this way it would not be necessary to send thousands of pounds from time to time to other places for the purchase of this article of trade. His Excellency also expressed a hope that they would prepare their lands for planting cotton, as the seeds would soon be distributed among them, and a cotton gin would be supplied for cleaning the cotton. His Excellency also recommended to their attention the importance of their building good houses for the habitation of their families, and of their making a good provision for their children.

The messengers replied that they would be very glad to get the kola plants and would cultivate them as soon as they were supplied. They would also prepare lands for planting cotton.

On leaving, the messengers asked that men should be employed by the Government for scavenging the town of Ikorodu as was the practice some time ago. The Governor said he could not accede to that request, as it was the duty of the Oloja, assisted by the Oshogbos and Balogun, to see that their town was kept in a clean and tidy condition. The Governor thanked them for their visit, and charged them to convey an expression of his good wishes to the Oloja and Oshogbos of Ikorodu, and also to inform them that His Excellency hoped to visit their town at no distant date.

Presents were exchanged and the messengers withdrew.

JANUARY, 19.

Chiefs Obanikoro, Aromire and Soenu accompanied by representatives of the people of Ebute Eja, near Ikorodu in the Eastern District, waited on the Governor with a message from Prince Eleko.

The Prince desired them to inform His Excellency that the people of Ebute Eja had approached him as their overlord, and had expressed a wish for one Eshugbayi to be appointed in the place of their late Bale Odu. Odu had misbehaved, had been taken to Court and was now deposed. The whole town was in favour of the appointment of the new man, but the Prince would not take action without His Excellency's sanction.

His Excellency then suggested that this appointment be submitted to the consideration of the Central Native Council at their next meeting.

The Governor showed to the Chiefs a copy of the latest Government Gazette containing the proceedings of the last meeting of the Central Native Council. His Excellency informed the Chiefs that as soon as the necessary types were received from England, the "General News" section of the Government Gazette would be published in parallel columns in English and Yoruba. At the request of the Chiefs the Governor directed that they should be regularly supplied with copies of the Gazette.

His Excellency informed the Chiefs that there was an incident at the last meeting of the Central Native Council which caused His Excellency great surprise. One of the members employed discourteous language in his speech and exceeded the bounds of fair and temperate discussion. Nevertheless, it appeared that no action had been taken by the Chiefs on this matter. It would be unfair to the Chiefs if His Excellency did not refer to it, for His Excellency entertained no doubt in his mind that the Chiefs were not in sympathy with that member. His Excellency also remarked that he had been connected with Native Councils for the past 28 years, and had never witnessed such courtesy shown by any member. It was to be remembered that it would be impossible to maintain the dignity of the Council if incivility on the part of members should be allowed to pass without notice.

His Excellency observed further that he learnt incidentally at the last meeting of the Native Council, that it was the custom to make the Chiefs an annual present. His Excellency was willing to maintain this custom, but would not make them the present until next King's Birthday, as His Excellency did not wish it to appear that the present had been made at their solicitation. His Excellency was however glad that previous to the Council meeting he had already made a small present to Prince Eleko. Otherwise, in order to save appearance, His Excellency would have also felt compelled to withhold the present to the Prince until next King's Birthday.

The Governor added that it seemed advisable that a few simple rules should be drawn up for the guidance of the members of the Native Council, in respect to the conduct of business at the meetings of the Council. One such rule would be, that in a general discussion, no member should be allowed to speak more than once on a subject, except in explanation or in reply to a question from the Chair.

The Chiefs after expressing their thanks to the Governor for the beautiful patience and considerate forbearance which His Excellency exhibited at the last meeting of the Council, asked to be allowed to tender their apologies for the conduct of the discourteous member, who threatened to mar the harmony of their proceedings. They completely disowned sympathy with that member, and stated that immediately the Council had risen and His Excellency had retired, the Senior Chiefs remonstrated with that member for his conduct. He was subsequently summoned before Prince Eleko and the other Chiefs and was severely reprimanded. After this, the Chiefs by resolution asked Prince Eleko to wait on His Excellency and make ample apologies for the unfortunate incident. The Chiefs also expressed their agreement with His Excellency as to the proposed rules for the conduct of business at the meetings of the Native Council.

The Governor remarked that he was glad to learn of the steps taken by Prince Eleko and the Chiefs as regarded what happened at the last meeting of the Native Council, and considered that the proper place and time for making any apologies for that incident would be the next meeting of the Central Native Council. His Excellency hoped that Prince Eleko would some time during the week fix the date for this meeting of the Council.

The Chiefs then withdrew.

Sumunu, Bale of Obada in the Eastern District, accompanied by some of his people, waited on the Governor to bid His Excellency welcome on his return to the Colony. The Bale stated that he and his people had heard of His Excellency's patience and good nature from the different Chiefs in the Interior with whom they had come into relation. Their prayer was that His Excellency might be spared to live long among them, in order that they might enjoy His Excellency's beneficent rule.

The Governor thanked them for their hearty welcome and kind expressions respecting himself. His Excellency then enquired about their welfare, about their trading, fishing and farming, and whether they had cultivated cocoa, kola, and cotton.

The Bale replied that their farms yielded much last year, that the people were industrious and had caught a lot of fish which were smoked and taken to Ejirin market for sale, and that they had planted plenty of cocoon trees which were now bearing. He stated that they had not tried the planting of kola nut or cotton, and could not say whether cotton or kola would thrive in their farms, as their soil was sand. But they would be glad to have kola plants or cotton seeds for the purpose of making an experiment.

The Bale also made a complaint to the Governor that fifteen years ago, when a market was established in his town, Hausa soldiers were regularly stationed there until they were replaced by a policeman; but two months ago, the District Commissioner of Epe removed the policeman to Igbogun, and his town was now without the protection of a policeman.

The Governor promised the Bale that a policeman would be again stationed in Obada. His Excellency also urged on the Bale to endeavour to improve the condition of his town, to see to his people building good houses and to their preparing lands for the cultivation of cotton and kola nuts. His Excellency also informed the Bale that there was a new kind of maize known in South America and South Africa which commanded a good price in Liverpool, and that he had asked the Hon'ble Colonial Secretary to send for a few bushels in order that the cultivation of it should be tried here.

The Bale remarked that he and his people would be glad to make a trial of this new grain, if they were supplied with some for planting.

The Bale and his people then withdrew.

Mr. Ladapo Ademola, Agent to the Abeokuta Government, who had recently returned from Abeokuta waited on the Governor to make the kind regards of the Alake to His Excellency.

JANUARY, 21.

Braimah Lemomu, Yesufu Shitta Bey and some of the leading Mohammedans of Lagos waited on His Excellency the Governor to bid him welcome on his safe return to the Colony. They explained that the real reason of their being apparently late in calling to see His Excellency was that they were waiting for His Excellency to have completely rested and settled after his long voyage.

His Excellency thanked them for calling and spoke to them on the following topics:

- (i) The advisability of the two parties of Mohammedans at Epe uniting and praying together in the same mosque.
- (ii) The discourteous speech and manner of a Mohammedan Chief at the last meeting of the Central Native Council.
- (iii) The proposed visit to Mecca of Abu of Epe.
- (iv) The present harmattan.

With reference to the Epe Mohammedans, the Lemomu informed His Excellency that during a recent visit to Lagos of members of both parties, he succeeded in persuading them to pray together in the same mosque.

His Excellency thanked the Lemomu for what he had done, and expressed a hope that the time would soon arrive when both parties would again pray together in the mosque at Epe. His Excellency remarked that he was sure that such a reunion would be most pleasing to God and the Prophet.

With respect to the behaviour of the Mohammedan Chief at the meeting of the Central Native Council, the Lemomu explained that it was only four years ago that the Chief became a Mohammedan, and as yet had but a poor knowledge of the Koran. The Lemomu hoped that in the circumstance His Excellency would take a lenient view of the Chief's fault of speech and manner.

The Governor observed that he considered the Lemomu's explanation of the Chief's conduct to be adequate, for it would take a long time for a great religion to take hold of a man's heart and affections and effectively control his wayward impulses. His Excellency however hoped that the Lemomu would endeavour to get the Chief to spend one hour a day with himself for religious instruction and one hour also with Yesufu Shitta Bey for instruction in manners.

Jan. 24, 1903.

In so far as His Excellency was concerned, he had made up his mind to be patient with the Chief, until the Koran had taken a stronger hold of the heart of the latter.

With reference to Abu's proposed visit to Mecca, the Governor told the Lemomu and those who accompanied the latter, that he had advised Abu not to undertake his pilgrimage without first being at peace with his neighbours and co-religionists. Otherwise, his prayers would not be heard when he prayed in the holy temple, for he would need have to pray that God should bless his own party and curse the other party. This would not be acceptable to God or the Prophet. The Governor urged on the Lemomu to impress on Abu the seriousness of the situation.

The Lemomu promised to act accordingly, and thanked the Governor for this great interest and trouble His Excellency was taking in the matter.

The Lemomu on the other hand mentioned to His Excellency that the following subjects were giving great anxiety to the elderly Mohammedans in the community.

- (i) The practice of concealing young marriageable girls by Mohammedan young men, without having first sought the hands of the girls in marriage from their parents.
- (ii) The practice of concealing young marriageable girls by Mohammedan young men, who had sought the hands of the girls in marriage, but would not wait for the proper marriage ceremonies to be performed.
- (iii) The practice of burying the bodies of pagans in Mohammedan cemeteries merely on the ground that these pagans were married to Mohammedans, although they had not embraced Islam during their life time.

The Governor observed that the question of native marriage had been placed on the Agenda Paper of the next meeting of the Central Native Council, and if time permitted would be considered at that meeting. The meeting His Excellency believed would be long one as there were many important questions to be dealt with. If the marriage question should not be considered then, there would be something at any rate gained, for the question was very weighty and would make a great demand on the earnest thought and careful deliberation of the Council.

His Excellency the Governor directs the publication for general information of the following Report.

By Command,

C. H. HARLEY MOSELEY,
Colonial Secretary.

REPORT on a visit to AMSTERDAM, from the 10th till the 14th November, 1902.

The principal original object of this visit was to continue in Amsterdam the study of Malarial Fever, chiefly from the prophylactic point of view, and with special reference to the effect of salt water in the canals of that City in reducing the prevalence of the above disease.

It was soon found, however, that to one connected with Lagos the subject of the water supply of Amsterdam was not of less interest than its sanitary condition.

The fact that the topographical and physical conditions of Amsterdam and of the surrounding districts are in many respects nearly similar to those of Lagos, gives very special interest and importance to the sanitary state and water supply of the great Dutch City.

Malarial Fever in Holland.

To make the subject of Malaria in Holland more clear, there is attached hereto a translation of an interesting and instructive article on this theme by Dr. J. H. M. Schoo, District Medical Officer of Krommonie, near Amsterdam. From Dr. Schoo's paper it will be learned that malarial fevers were of constant occurrence in the Netherlands a century ago. At that time all the different forms of intermittent fever were common, including the type now known as "pernicious," or "malignant."

I am indebted to the courtesy of the very able and distinguished Professor Saltet, Professor of Hygiene in the University of Amsterdam, for the following Return, which shews clearly that the mortality from malaria has been steadily declining in Holland:—

Deaths from Intermittent Fevers in the Netherlands per 10,000 living:—

1875	2·4	1884	0·7	1893	0·2
1876	1·9	1885	0·7	1894	0·2
1877	1·7	1886	0·7	1895	0·2
1878	1·4	1887	0·6	1896	0·2
1879	1·2	1888	0·5	1897	0·1
1880	1·3	1889	0·4	1898	0·1
1881	1·2	1890	0·4	1899	0·1
1882	1·0	1891	0·2	1900	0·1
1883	0·9	1892	0·2

This Return should be compared with the Table of mortality from Malaria given by Dr. Schoo at page 5 of the paper attached hereto, which shows that malaria mortality in Holland has decreased from 306 deaths due to ordinary, and 136 deaths due to pernicious, malaria in 1885, to 30 of the former and 2 of the latter in 1899.

Malarial Fever in Amsterdam.

Dr. H. G. Ringeling, the accomplished Director of the Municipal Sanitary Service of Amsterdam, informs me that cases of real malaria are rare in that city, perhaps a little more common in the outskirts of the town, owing to the existence there of ditches and small swamps containing fresh water.

In these the anopholes breed freely. Examples of the anopheles maculipennis is certainly to be found, however, all over the City. Mosquito nets are used in the town, but wire gauze is not employed in the doors and windows. It does not appear that quinine is taken as a preventive. The usual course seems to be that when a family finds that a house or locality is a fever centre it leaves and goes elsewhere. But Mr. I van Hasselt, Director of Public Works, a gentleman of great knowledge and intelligence, to whom I am indebted for much valuable information, informed me that in his early days quinine was kept in every house like salt or bread. Dr. Ringeling collected anopholes last year in June and July in some of the parks, and in the neighbourhood of the Wilhelmina-Hospital, near to which there are ditches and swampy grounds.

He always found many more culex than anopholes.

The same gentleman has also most kindly furnished me with the following table of mortality from malaria in Amsterdam.

Years	Number of cases of death by febris intermitens.	Of these cases were febris perniciosa.	Per 10,000 inhabitants.	Years	Number of cases of death by febris intermitens.	Of these cases were febris perniciosa.	Per 10,000 inhabitants.

1877	66	39	2·22	1890	21	2	0·51
1878	72	22	2·38	1891	6	3	0·14

1886	46	12	1·23	1899	6	—	0·11
1887	36	28	0·95	1900	1	—	0·02

Dr. Ringeling points out, however, that this Return is not a safe guide by which to determine the occurrence of malaria in Amsterdam, as cases of death from indigenous malaria are exceedingly rare, nearly all cases that have a fatal issue being met with in patients that have brought the disease from the Netherland Indies, from Africa, &c.

In the Report on Public Health in Amsterdam for 1901 malaria does not even appear as a cause of death. The march of malaria in Amsterdam is thus, it would appear, a fast one towards extinction.

Topography of Amsterdam.

The City of Amsterdam has arisen behind the dam of the Amstel River, which opens from the South into the Y, a small inlet of the Zuider Zee. The Zaan, coming from the North, also falls into the Y. The whole of the surrounding district is very even, all lowlying.

Formerly the water of the Zuider Zee flowed into and out of the canals with each tide, leaving great quantities of mud in the canals. The water was led from the Y and the canals to the North Sea in 1826, by the North Holland Canal.

For survey purposes a Datum Line is used which is 40 centimetres (15·8 inches) below the mean high tide of the Zuider Zee. This datum line is, it appears, continued through central Europe. The ordinary rise and fall of tide in the Zuider Zee at Amsterdam is only from 8 to 12 inches. The level at which the salt water canals of the town is generally maintained is about 50 centimetres (19·7 inches) below the datum line, and therefore 35·5 inches below the mean high tide, and 25·5 inches below the mean low tide of the Zuider Zee. But the streets are often on the same level as the mean high tide, and from that up to nearly a foot above it. The North Sea at ordinary high water is 8 feet above the level of the Zuider Zee at Amsterdam. The rise and fall of the North Sea is about $3\frac{1}{3}$ metres, in round numbers about 11 feet; but with strong, continuous, north-west winds, the North Sea may rise a score of feet above ordinary high water mark.

The Y, and the salt water Canals of Amsterdam, communicate with the North Sea through the Nord Zee Canal. It is 15 miles long, and was opened in 1876. It is from 197 to 328 feet broad, and 29½ feet deep. The depth of water in the Y harbour is sufficient to accommodate any vessel that can reach the port. The ordinary water level of the North Sea Canal in 1901 was as follows:—

During 293 hours, at the datum line;
 " 1332 " , lower than the datum line;
 " 7135 " , above the datum line.

This Canal, the canals of the town, and the Y were kept about the same average level, 4 metres or 15·7 inches below the datum line.

It is clear from the above that a flow of water from the North Sea Canal into the North Sea and thus from the Zuider Zee, from the Y, and from the Canals of the town, can be obtained only near ordinary low water in the North Sea or at spring tides.

The North Holland Canal need not be considered in this connection.

During the year 1900, water from the Zuider Zee was admitted into the canals on 230 nights through the syphon at the mouth of the Y, during ebb in the Nord Zee Canal. In January, this water was admitted only on 10 nights, and the same again in February. In May, June, and July, the numbers were 17, 24, 27, respectively. In January, 2,675,000 cubic metres were let in, and the greatest quantity admitted in any one month was 7,925,000 cubic metres in May. To renew and lower the water in the peripheral salt water canals, the machinery at the mouth of the Y was in operation 768½ hours, and forced out into the Zuider Zee 47,004,000 cubic metres of water.

This great expense is rendered necessary from the fact that the town, like the greater part of North Holland, is below the level of the sea.

The current from the North Sea would be too strong to be admitted into the canals of the city, hence only the Zuider Zee is used for the purpose of refreshing the canals.

The North Sea is kept out principally by the Sand Dunes; the Zuider Zee by sea dykes, and by the great dam with its five gigantic sluices at the mouth of the Y, built in 1878.

The oldest and principal part of the City presents a form approaching to that of a semicircle, with the Y as its chord. Water from the Zuider Zee fills all the canals in this half circle, which is surrounded by peripheral canals that derive water from the same source. The canals that are fed from the Zuider Zee are dammed or sluiced off from the fresh water Amstel canals on the southern outskirts of the city. The flow of water into and from the canals can be regulated by opening and closing the sluices on the North Sea Canal, and those erected at the mouth of the Y, between it and the Zuider Zee; and the water in the canals can be kept nearly at a constant level, while it is being renewed from the side of the Zuider Zee.

This renewal is very necessary inasmuch as the sewage of a town of 550,000 people is discharged into the Canals. It is fully recognised by the authorities that this system of disposal of the sewage cannot be continued in a great city, growing with alarming rapidity. The remedy, whatever it is, will be a costly one. The canals are generally three or four feet deep, but with probably twice that depth of mud at the bottom. They are navigable to boats in all directions, the steam launches being provided with folding funnels to let them pass under the bridges. The North Sea water as already stated is not let into Amsterdam. If westerly winds heap up water on its Coast line so that the Canals of the City cannot be discharged into the North Sea at low water, then the town canals can be relieved only by forcing the water into the Zuider Zee by means of the powerful steam machinery provided for that purpose at the mouth of the Y.

The Salinity of the Water.

The salinity of the surface water of the North Sea is about 3·4 per cent, but it will be seen from what precedes that advantage cannot be taken of this large proportion of salt to refresh the canals of Amsterdam.

The salinity of the Zuider Zee is about 1·06 per cent. Dr. Ringeling states that during the past summer the proportion of chlorine present in the water of the canals in different parts of the town varied from 0·925 to 3·07 grammes a litre, that is from '09 to '3 per cent. The water in the canals was of necessity diluted by cleansing water, and by the fresh water from the Amstel.

He adds:—"At an earlier period, before 1872—When the seawater for refreshment purposes was let into the canals at each hightide, the quantity of salt in the canal water must have been considerably more, as may be concluded from the analysis made by Professor G. J. Mulder, who found in 1825 in the water of different canals in Amsterdam an amount of chlorine from 4·979 to 5·521 grammes a litre (that is from say '5 to '56 per cent). The quantity of salt in the water of the ponds of some parks in Amsterdam where anopheles have been found varied from '029 to '045 per cent."

It would therefore appear that the amount of salt present in the canals of Amsterdam would not be sufficient, at least in a warmer climate, to prevent the developement of anopheles.

Major Ross and myself were assured that water we saw full of mosquito larvæ, both Culex and Anopheles, at Ismailia contained '9 per cent of salt. In point of fact it does not seem to be as yet determined what minimum degree of salinity may be sufficient to arrest the developement of mosquito larvæ.

Dr. G. Tedaldi in a contribution to the Study of Larvicide Substances (Atti della Società per gli Studi Della Malaria, Vol. III.) points out that the limit of salinity varies according to different observers; that Celli and Casagrandi state that a solution of 5% of salt is a good larvicide; that Centanni and Arta say that they have seen the larvæ of anopheles die in a one per cent solution; that Ficalbi on the other hand has found that in brackish water containing 2·08% of salt the larvæ of culex thrive comfortably; and that finally, Perrone asserts that larvæ may be found in water containing a considerable amount of salt but only incidentally; and that according to the same author the maximum degree of salinity in which the larvæ of anopheles can live is 8%.

The maximum salinity that can be resisted by mosquito larvæ according to the experiments of Tedaldi himself is 1·5%. In stronger solutions they die.

On account of the great practical importance of the subject in Lagos, the Table prepared by Dr. Tedaldi is here given in full.

Table of the action of chloride of Sodium on the Larvæ of Mosquitoes, (Culex Pipiens and Culex Annulatus) at a temperature of 20° C., (68° F.).

From the above it would seem probable that the frequent renewal of water in the canals, and its movement by boats and launches constantly navigating them, have much to do with the fact that mosquitoes do not breed in the salt water canals of Amsterdam.

Dr. Schoo, an excellent observer, in a recent letter addressed to myself says:—

"The water in the Canals (of Amsterdam) contains about 2 to 2½% of salt. In this water larvæ of anopheles could never be found either by me, or by Dr. Ringeling or others. It is not so as to the waters in the parks and gardens of the surroundings of Amsterdam, which do contain the larvæ of anopheles, and of course cases of malaria occur in the neighbouring houses. In the centre of Amsterdam malarial fevers have not been seen for 15 or 20 years, though it was severe from 1850 ± 1872. It can be explained in several ways why malaria disappeared from Amsterdam. The greater percentage of seawater after 1872, and the introduction of water by pipes instead of the old tank system, which tanks are excellent breeding grounds for mosquitoes, just like the sewage tanks described by you at Ismailia. There are now no cases of death from malaria at Amsterdam, except of persons from the Colonies."

That salt water has played a part in the effacement of Malaria in Amsterdam seems to be beyond doubt. It appears, however, that many tanks and cisterns that were made and used for storing rain roof water before the dune water was brought into Amsterdam, still exist in whole or in part, and that they supply breeding ground to mosquitoes, even in the central part of the town which is so closely traversed in all directions by canals containing brackish water. In the three parks on the southern part of the City Dr. Ringeling finds in the pools and ponds large numbers of larvæ of both culex and anopheles. The Hospital for infectious diseases is in this fresh water zone, and seems to be a malarial centre. Of ten patients admitted there lately for other diseases, five became affected with malarial fever. But the same disease also occasionally attacks patients in the General Hospital, which is inside the salt water circle. Cases of malaria inside the salt water area are, according to Dr. Ringeling, not common.

Mortality Statistics of Amsterdam.

In connection with what precedes, as well as with what follows in regard to salt water canals, and to the general Water Supply of Amsterdam, it is of interest to compare the mortality rates of that city with some of the other great towns that exist under widely different conditions. The following Table is to be found in an article by Dr. Ringeling in La Revue D'Hygiène for July 1900, on Le Service Sanitaire Municipal D'Amsterdam.

Salt water in Lagos.

The proportion of salt in the water of the Lagos Lagoon has not yet been absolutely ascertained. Certain analyses made to determine the suitability of this water for steam purposes gave a proportion of 1·3% of salt. It must be greater at high tide, when the water comes in from the sea, than at low water when the fresh water from the rivers flows towards the ocean. It must also vary with the season, being less during and after heavy rains that swell the rivers. It no doubt contains at all times a greater proportion of salt than is found in the canals of Amsterdam. Lagos possesses over Amsterdam other great advantages with respect to the use of salt water. The greater portion of the island is a few feet above the level of high water. Sluices and pumping gear would therefore be unnecessary in a canal system here. At Lagos there is a rise and fall of from two to three feet, probably about the most convenient and suitable difference between high and low tide, one that would give sufficient movement to the water for cleansing and renewing, and that would prevent the hatching of mosquitoes, while not creating so strong a current as to cause serious difficulty in confining the water within the walls of a canal.

But the probability is that in physical origin and in its present geological condition Lagos more closely resembles Venice than Amsterdam. The Lido and Lagoon of Venice seem to have their almost exact counterparts in the Lagos Lagoon and the long stripe of land that lies between it and the sea.

But Lagos as compared with the Italian City has again a clear advantage in the fact that it rests principally on nearly clean sand, whereas Venice stands chiefly on mud. The difference, again, between high and low water marks at Venice is only 3 metre, say one foot, a difference that does not seem sufficient for the proper renewal of the water, nor great enough to lend to it as active a movement as one would wish it to have. In this comparison the advantages would be all clearly on the side of Lagos.

It certainly would appear that the formation and position of Lagos are such that salt water canals could be built and maintained there at small expense, canals useful alike for purposes of transport and of sanitation. Over a considerable part of the town, where it is built on sand several feet above sea level, canals would not be required, but the probability is strong that they will be found to be practicable and most useful in connecting the heads of several swamps and inlets in the northern and eastern parts of the town. A survey has been ordered to test how, by means of canals that would be navigable to boats and canoes, the inland end of the Eleghata Creek could be connected with the mud and water channel that surrounds Alakoro Island; then to join that channel to the nearest end of the Idumagbo Lagoon; and that again with the Iselegangan Lagoon.

As the space available for building purposes at Lagos is too small for the population, there will still remain the need to fill in and reclaim as much swampy land as possible. This should in my opinion be pushed as fast and as far as the funds at disposal will admit of.

Although Lagos cannot now become a second Venice, still there can be no reasonable doubt that if advantage is taken of the position of this town, it can be very greatly improved in every way by the free use of salt water. Indeed it would seem to be almost an ideal place for such works. These must be considered from several different points of view, such as their effects on the removal of sewage, the transport of goods, the diminution of fever and other diseases, but a detailed examination of these matters cannot be undertaken in this report. Suffice it to say, that my several visits to Venice, and my recent brief sojourn in Amsterdam, have convinced myself that the subject of salt water canals in Lagos is one that deserves the most careful consideration, as likely to be one of the most important factors that will influence a decision to retain the seat of the Government of this territory permanently at Lagos, and to make of the latter a great city, certainly the greatest on the West Coast of Africa.

The water supply of Amsterdam.

In visiting the Water-Works I was accompanied and assisted by Henry Reeve, Esquire, C.M.G., &c., Director of Works, Lagos.

At present, Amsterdam has three different systems to furnish it with water for domestic and general purposes:—

Water from the Sand Dunes, since 1854.

Well water, since 1895.

River Water, since 1888.

Prior to 1854 the water supply was chiefly obtained from rain collected from the roofs of the houses, which was stored in special tanks, and in quantity sufficient for the needs of the family. This water was of very fair quality as there were then no great manufactures, and the fuel used was turf. But the rainfall was only about 31·4 inches, thus requiring great care and economy in water. Though some of these tanks still exist, it does not appear that they are much used for their original purposes. Along with the rain water they also used, formerly, water from the Amstel and from the Vecht. The supply from the Vecht was then considered fairly good drinking water, and was brought to town in boats. The Amstel water was polluted by sewage, and could not be used as a potable water.

Dune Water.

The dunes of Haarlem, from which Amsterdam obtains its chief supply of potable water, run nearly north and south along the margin of the North Sea, and have been formed there apparently by the combined action of wind and wave. The sea is gaining on the dunes, and the Government has had to construct groins to divert the current from the beach. They rise to a maximum height of nearly 60 metres above the sea, and have an average altitude on the coast of about 10 metres. The dune belt is nearly two miles wide. Water is collected for Amsterdam from about 3,500 hectares, (13.6 sq. miles), of the dune area. This superficies cannot be extended northward without interfering with the water supply of Haarlem, nor southward without encroaching on Leyden. The dunes from which water is led to Amsterdam lie between the North Sea and the great and rich Harlemmer Meer Polder, to which at one time the Zuider Zee was joined through the Y. This great polder lies from 3.75 to 4.80 metres below the datum line.

These dunes consist of yellowish white sand. We were conducted over them in the most obliging manner by F. Graaf van Randwijk. At a depth of about 3 metres, according to Mr. Drost, who is Engineer Sub-director of the Amsterdam Water Works, its physical analysis gives the following results:—

Out of 100 parts of Sand the diameter of the grain is as below:—

Size of grain of sand.	In parts of the weight.
Greater than 0.50 mm.	0.5%
Less " 0.50 "	99.5
" 0.42 "	96.6
" 0.26 "	46.8
" 0.20 "	15.1
" 0.155 "	5.2
" 0.095 "	2
" 0.04 (finest slime) in	0.9

Ten per cent of the sand is smaller than 0.182 mm, (effective size) and the uniformity co-efficient is 1.55.

The sand may therefore be considered as relatively very fine; and consequently its percolating properties are not great.

The slime is made up principally of particles of clay and oxide of iron, and in a lesser degree consists of very fine sand and chalk.

Its Chemical Analysis shews that by far the greater part is composed of minute grains of quartz; besides this it contains:—

Iron Oxide, Fe ₂ O ₃ ,	0.670%
Calcium Carbonate, CaCO ₃ ,	3.760%
Magnesium Carbonate, Mg. CO ₃ .	0.347%

These two latter ingredients are, no doubt, from the shells everywhere found in the sand.

According to this analysis some 95% of the dune sand consists of silica. This sandy formation extends below sea level. Thin layers of peat and of clay have been found in some of the branches of the canal system.

The surface of the dunes is lumpy and uneven. In the deeper and larger hollows there are generally patches of stunted oak and birch, but there are very few other trees. The greater part of the surface is covered by fine moss, by juniper and other bushes, but practically everywhere by dune grass (Arundo Arenaria).

The dunes from which water is collected are private property; and at least about 30 people reside on this area. It does not appear that any special care is taken as to the disposal of their sewage.

The proprietors are compelled by law to keep the dunes planted with dune grass, to prevent the sand from being blown into the canals. It was evident that many patches had been planted very carefully last season.

The whole area is thickly occupied by rabbits, with the droppings of which the ground is almost covered.

It will thus be seen that the loss of water by evaporation through the vegetation of the dunes is not great.

Collecting Channels.

The rain water that falls on this receiving ground is collected in trenches or canals that form what is really a gigantic open well, which is some 14.7 statute miles in length, (23,665 metres), and which winds and branches along the lowest parts of the dunes between the higher mounds or ridges of sand. The following are the dimensions of this well in cross section:—

Depth some 30 to 40 feet more or less; width at bottom 9.8 feet; slope of sides 1½:1. The width at the top is about 100 to 150 feet. There is a berm of 2½ feet, at a height of 8½ feet from the bottom of the canal. According to de Ryke the slope, including the berms, is about three to one.

The sides are carefully planted with dune grass.

The fall at the bottom of this canal or trench is not more than 0.0002 a metre, and the velocity obtainable, according to de Ryke, not over 0.20 metre a second, (785 yards an hour.) Generally all the canals work together, as they did at the time of our visit, but by means of sluices the flow of water into or from different sections can be stopped. The water in the canals is generally about 5 feet deep. At the side of the dunes next to the polder, the main trench opens into a reservoir that covers some 4 hectares of land. The water is generally about 2 metres deep in this receptacle, which is full of fish. Thence it passes by a four foot iron pipe to the filter beds at the pump-station of Vogelenzang.

According to the article by de Ryke in Burton's Water Supply of Towns, an article to which I am indebted for information on this and several other points, "all water held by the sand tends to move towards the canals down to a line about 1 to 200 from the water surface across."

The limit of draining seems to extend up to nearly 400 metres (437 yards). The different windings of the canal are therefore kept about 800 to 1000 metres apart. The canals have been made as deep as was considered safe without incurring the risk of coming on brackish water.

From the above it will be noticed that no collecting pipes are laid in the sand to receive water and convey it into the canals. The canals alone collect the water, in this way performing the functions of a great, elongated, open well.

The Rainfall of the Dunes.

De Ryke mentions the curious fact that more water may be drawn from sand dunes than would be represented by the area multiplied into the precipitation shewn by the rain guage. But no doubt the amount of water obtainable must be practically, other things being equal, dependent on the rainfall.

The actual Rainfall for the year 1901 is shewn on the table below. It will be noticed that there is some considerable proportion for each month in the year. F. Graaf van Randwijk states, however, that a very much larger proportion of what falls in winter than of what falls in summer becomes available for the water supply. In effect it is during winter that the sand dunes become charged with water.

The average rainfall at Lagos would seem to be about 79 inches a year.

The amount of evaporation that takes place from the rain water that falls on the dunes is no doubt considerably influenced by the temperature. Of this a weekly Return is made, and the table below gives the results for the year 1901. It will be found that the average temperature for the year is, on this table, 48.5° F.

The average temperature at Lagos is 82.5° F.

The average annual rainfall on the collecting ground during the years 1888 to 1899 was, according to Dr. Ringeling, 746 millimetres, that is 29.37 inches. This should give on an arithmetical basis 26,110,000 cubic metres of water. Of this total quantity however only 29.5 per cent could be pumped up for domestic use, that is 7,702,450 cubic metres of water, or, on the basis of 220 gallons to a cubic metre, 1,694,539,000 gallons, which would furnish a daily supply of an average of 4,643,570 gallons. It is not dealt out uniformly, but at the rate of from 20,000 to 24,000 cubic metres, say 4,840,000 gallons, a day, on the average. The dunes are about 12 miles from Amsterdam, and the water is sent from the pumping station at a minimum pressure due to a working head of 20 m. The population of Amsterdam is nearly 550,000. In 1901 the quantity of filtered dune water supplied to the inhabitants of that town was 8,735,044 cubic metres, or 1,921,709,680 gallons, which would give a supply of 9.5 gallons a day to each resident, from a collecting area of about 14 square miles.

The Quality of Dune Water.

Sanitary Director Dr. Ringeling considers that the Well water is the best that reaches Amsterdam, but regards the Dune water as very good. It is daily made the object of chemical examination; and is twice weekly examined bacteriologically.

The following table gives the mean monthly results of the chemical analysis made for sanitary purposes:—

The loss on ignition was determined by raising the residual solids to a red heat, moistening the ashes with a solution of carbonate of ammonia, drying on the water bath, and raising slowly to a red heat a second time.

The weight of the solids was determined by drying the residue at 105° to 110° C.

Dr. Ringeling adds "Ammonia has never been found in the dune or in the well water. There are always traces of it in the river water. Nitrates have not been found in any of the three. Only once have traces of nitrites been detected in the river water. Small quantities of phosphates have been detected 38 times in the dune water, 27 times in the river water; and never in the well water. No salts of injurious metals have been met with in these waters."

The water in the collecting channels had at the time of our visit a light yellowish faintly greenish colour in certain lights. At many places there was a large quantity of fine algae on the surface. As it is of much interest to compare the composition of this water before and after it is filtered at the Pump Station at Volegenzang, the following table of analyses for 1901 is here given.

The filter beds at the Pump-station at Vogelenzang are of the usual structure.

They have a superficial area of 22,200 square metres. They are eight in number. The bottom is asphalt, covered by shingle and by sand from the dunes to a depth of 80 centimetres. They are cleaned at intervals of from three to forty days, depending on the weather. At the pump room the water is raised to a height of twenty metres, to the top of the pipes of cast iron, one of twenty and one of twenty-four inches, that carry it over the dozen miles that separate the station from Amsterdam, where it is again raised for reticulation.

Malaria fever does not occur at the Pump-station at Vogelenzang, but the Medical Officer of the district informed me that he sees in the neighbourhood about half a score of cases of tertian a year. He has, however, not found that these cases are increasing in number.

Well or Subterranean Water.

Next in interest and importance to the dune water comes the well supply of Amsterdam. This source, opened in 1895, gave 1,001,936 cubic metres, or 220,425,920 gallons of water, in 1901. This comes from wells in some extensive heaths lying nearly 14 miles to the South east of the City. These moors rise some 10 metres above the sea. This supply would give 1.09 gallons a day to each one of the 550,000 inhabitants. In a reprint from the Revue d' Hygiène Dr. Ringeling gives the following comparison of the two potable waters of Amsterdam, and of the Vecht water, the latter though filtered being used only for cleansing, fire extinction, and similar purposes.

The remarkable purity of the well water is very apparent from the above figures. It has been supplied at the rate of about 1,000,000 cubic metres during the last four years. It is collected over an area of some 1500 square metres. The well tubes are about 40 metres deep, and have a diameter of 10 centimetres. The daily supply from this source to each person, calculated on 550,000 inhabitants, would be 1·09 gallons.

The geological formation in which this water is obtained is shewn in the section below :—

Large Yellow Sand	... 11·50 M. Above Datum Line.
Datum Line
Large Yellow Sand	... 7·30 M.
Fine Yellow Sand	... 2·70 M.
Yellow Clay	... 1·10 M.
Yellow loam Sand	... 4·30 M.
Fine Sand with Gravel	... 5·90 M.
Large Grey Sand	... 0·80 M.
Large Sand and Gravel	... 4·10 M.
Large grit Sand	... 1·10 M.
" Grey Sand	... 2·50 M.
Grey Sand	... 0·30 M.
Yellow Clay and Sand	... 3·70 M.
Red Clay and Sand	... 1·60 M.
Fine Yellow loam and sand	... 3·80 M.
Red Clay Sand	... 2·10 M.
Below Datum Line.
41·30 M. = 135½ feet.

The water rises to the Datum Line. In rising, it is filtered through layers of sand in the well tubes from the depth of 39·20 to 35·40 metres; and again from 33·80 to 21·30 metres, that is altogether through 16·30 metres. The water enters through copper pipes provided with perforations so fine as to exclude all sand particles. The diamter of the copper pipe is 8 centimetres. It is protected by an enveloping iron pipe of a diameter of 15 centimetres. Between the filtering copper pipes and the encasing iron pipe there is a layer of sand and gravel.

As the Vecht River water is used only for cleansing, fire extinction, and other purposes for which a good potable water is not required, it need not be fully considered here. The amount supplied in 1901 was 6,295,155 cubic metres. This would give an average of 6·9 gallons to each person daily.

The whole water supply of Amsterdam would according to the above data be :—

Dune Water to each of 550,000 inhabitants, daily, during the year, 9·5 gals. Potable Water.
Well " "	1·09
River " "	6·90 " Cleansing "
Total daily supply	17·49 " per head.

The authorities of Amsterdam recognise the fact that this supply is even now inadequate. It will have to be supplemented by Rhine water, or by more well water.

According to Van Der Meullens Vital Statistics for Amsterdam from 1850 to 1890 the average mortality per 1000 inhabitants has been :—

1850 to 1859,	...	30·69
1860 "	1869,	25·84
1870 "	1879,	25·89
1880 "	1889,	24·65
1880 "	1890,	24·45

The last conclusion he draws from his elaborate and instructive study is this :—

"The principal cause of this diminished mortality is to be sought in improved hygienic conditions. And the chief factor in this is the increased use of good drinking water."

An interesting commentary on these figures is furnished by the table of mortality in Amsterdam from Typhoid Fever given by the same author, from the first inception of the Dune Water company in 1854 to 1890.

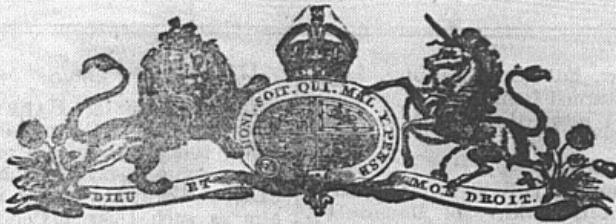

Mortality from Typhoid per 1,000 inhabitants :—

1854 to 1859	...	1·910
1860 "	1869	1·156
1870 "	1879	0·506
1880 "	1889	0·215

It now becomes of much interest to glance at the circumstances of Lagos in so far as they can be compared with the different points of importance touched upon in what has been written above.

Mr. Osbert Chadwick, C.M.G., has strongly and consistently advocated a water supply for Lagos from sand dunes lying along the sea not far from this town. This gentleman, who has not visited Lagos, had been mis-informed with respect to these dunes. In point of fact they unfortunately do not exist. On the Ikoyi plain, however, it is considered that some 250 acres could be made available as a collecting ground on the principles advocated by Mr. Chadwick. From this area on the basis of calculation applied further on to the Apapa plain a daily supply of hardly 5 gallons a day for each person would be obtainable for a population of 50,000 inhabitants.

This quantity would obviously be insufficient as a water supply for Lagos.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Lagos, 16th April, 1903

His Excellency the Governor directs the publication for general information of the subjoined Extract from a Lecture on "The Diet of Native Labourers," read before the Rhodesia Scientific Association, Salisbury Branch, on the 25th April, 1902, by Mr. Joseph M. Orpen, M.L.C., M.E.C., Surveyor General Administering Agricultural Department at Salisbury, Rhodesia.

A supply of the Mealies has been received, and sent to the Model Farm at Oloke-Meji.

By Command,
C. H. HARLEY MOSELEY,
Colonial Secretary.

In Natal mealies are generally grown from better varieties than the Mashona's mealies, and are often eaten boiled whole, or after one stamping, or the meal is ground without the above preparation and boiled for porridge. The Agricultural Department here has recently introduced a small quantity of a Peruvian variety, and will obtain more. (Cuzco or Peruvian maize, obtainable from Messrs. Praschkaer & Co., Ltd., 112, Fenchurch Street, London, E.C.; 28, Brunswick Street, Liverpool, and 50 High Street, Hull. Telegraphic address: Praschkaer, London). It is very much larger than any yet introduced, and has very thin, brittle husk. It gives much fine flour. The flinty husk of the original maize has been bred off this grain. Such maize promises to become a great source of food supply, as maize is readily cultivated and dealt with by machinery. We could be taught many ways of cooking it by Colonists from the United States.

His Excellency the Governor directs the publication for general information of the subjoined Report of the Government Chemist on the analysis of water from Ebute Metta and Meko.

By Command,
C. H. HARLEY MOSELEY,
Colonial Secretary.

EBUTE METTA WATER.

A sample of water was drawn from the tap in the Locomotive Shed on 9th May and sealed in two empty sauerbrunen water bottles.

The source of this water is a well, fitted with a pump and covered in. The water is pumped first into a large storage tank mounted from 20 to 30 feet above the ground level, and from this tank distribution to various places is effected.

The water was colourless, odourless and very slightly alkaline to litmus. Microscopically, the sediment contained no living organisms nor anything of a suspicious character. Chemical analysis gave the following results:-

Total Solids	=	5.5	pits per 100,000 by weight.
Ammonia Free	=	.001	" "
" Albuminoid	=	.005	" "
Chlorine	=	.9	" "
Nitrogen as Nitrates	=	.008	" "
Nitrous Anhydride	=	.005	" "
Oxygen Consumed	=	.05	" "

Judging from above results I am of opinion that this water is of very good quality and highly suited for all domestic purposes.

WATER FROM MEKO.

Two Demijohns were carefully cleaned in the Laboratory and sent to Meko. They were returned about the 6th May by the Officer-in-Charge of Meko, filled with water from the well there for ordinary use.

Both samples were examined and the following results obtained.

The water was colourless, odourless and neutral to litmus. Microscopically, the sediment showed no living organisms nor anything of a suspicious nature. It gave

	No. 1	No. 2.
Total Solids	=	4.0	4.5 pts. per 100,000.
Free Ammonia	=	.003	.003

Chlorine	=	.7	.65
Nitrogen as nitrates	=	.007	.006
Nitrous Anhydride	=	.006	.006
Oxygen consumed	=	.01	.03

From a chemical point of view these samples show the water to be of good quality and highly suitable for drinking and other domestic purposes.

The subjoined Minute by His Excellency the Governor with reference to the proposed Scheme for the removal of Sewage matter is published for general information.

By Command,

HENRY REEVE,

Acting Colonial Secretary.

H.C.S.,

The subject of the removal of sewage matter has again recently occupied the attention of the Board of Health.

The plan that the Board thinks might by way of experiment be tried on a small scale with respect to at least the sewage pans now removed and emptied by contract, is in principle something like the following:—

1. Earth should be supplied by the Government free of charge. It should be properly stored so as to be kept dry and fit for use in the house sewage pans. The householder would be compelled by law to use this earth in the sewage pan.
2. The house should possess a suitable sewage receptacle, which would not be removed from the premises. It is strongly recommended that the Goree earthenware glazed pan should be tried for this purpose. It is thought that this if sprinkled with earth or sand, would not require washing when emptied. A dozen of these have been ordered for trial.
3. The house pan would be emptied by the Contractor's men into a portable pan; that, when filled, could be closed hermetically, and be then carried away on a man's head. It is thought such a portable pan would receive the contents of about five Goree pans.
4. The portable pans, full and closed tightly, would be deposited by the Contractor's men at a convenient spot either on a suitable tram wagon, or on a barge.

The following letter read by the Governor to the Battalion on Parade on the 24th instant is by command of His Excellency published for general information.

By Command,

HENRY REEVE,
Acting Colonial Secretary.

BURUTU -
19th April, 1903.

Dear Sir William,

Before I leave for England I wish to let you know how much I have appreciated the services of the Lagos Contingent with the KANO-SOKOTO Expeditionary Force.

The column for Field operations had been organized and concentrated before the contingent arrived and no opportunity arose for the active employment of the Lagos troops in the field.

They were however of the greatest value on the line of communications between ZUNGERU and ZARIA where they performed the whole of the convoy duty.

One detachment also proceeded on a patrol to BAUCHI.

Their picked carriers were quite invaluable and their equipment very complete; thanks largely to the personal interest you took in their despatch.

Lt. Col. Festing who commanded the line of Communications told me that all ranks performed the hard but somewhat tedious work that fell to their lot in a satisfactory and soldierly manner and I hope that they will soon return to Lagos none the worse for their labours.

I am sorry I had no opportunity of seeing the contingent and of thanking them on parade, and I should feel very much obliged if you could do this on my behalf on their return to Lagos.

Believe me,

Yours sincerely,
G. V. KEMBALL.

 The Hon'ble C. A. SAPARA WILLIAMS
 The Hon'ble REGINALD LITTLE.

} Un-official Members.

ABSENT.

The Hon'ble F. G. OSBORNE, Unofficial Member.

Minutes:-

The minutes of the Meeting held on the 17th day of March, 1904 were read corrected and confirmed.

Resolution of sympathy with His Majesty the King and the Royal Family on the death of the Duke of Cambridge.

His Excellency said: Before proceeding with the business for the day I would remind Honourable Members of Council that this is the first time Council has met since we have heard of the death of the late Duke of Cambridge. The Duke was at the Head of the British Army for many years, in which he took a very great interest. His death would be regretted by His Majesty's subjects in all parts of the Empire; and I feel certain that Honourable Members of Council would think it right that expression of sympathy should be sent to His Majesty from this Colony.

There is no mosquito-room here. The water supply is bad. Water has to be obtained from passing engines, and a neighbouring swamp. The latter is only available in the wet season. I should like to recommend that the Native Station-Master be supplied with a filter.

Adio.

No European Official lives here. There are three Native Officials. There is one tank. It is mosquito-proof. There is one earth latrine. There is one recently constructed mosquito-room. It is used as a Rest House by passing Europeans. The water-supply is bad. The water is got from a neighbouring brackish stream.

Ibadan.

Here there are four European Officials, and thirty-seven Native Officials. The health of the Europeans is good, and so far amongst the natives I have only had minor cases of illness to deal with. There are seven tanks in all. All are mosquito-proof. The latrines are of the pan pattern and are well-built except at the houses of Foreman Platelayer, and the Locomotive Foreman, where there are bush shelters, and at the Rest House where there is none. Besides the tanks above-mentioned the water-supply is also drawn from a well.

The Station compound is in a fairly tidy condition.

Traffic Inspector's Quarters.

The Traffic Inspector uses quinine, and sleeps under a mosquito-net. His mosquito-room is in a very deficient condition, and needs immediate attention. There is one mosquito-proof tank.

The latrine is good and is of the pan pattern.

Foreman Plate-layer's Quarters.

The Foreman Platelayer uses quinine regularly, a net seldom, and his mosquito-room never. There are two tanks both mosquito-proof. There is one earth latrine of thatch work. I would recommend that it be substituted by a pan-closet properly constructed.

Locomotive Foreman's Quarters.

In this house live the Locomotive Foreman and an Engine Driver. Both use quinine but not a net. There is no mosquito-room. There are two tanks, both mosquito-proof. The latrine is similar to that in the Foreman Platelayer's quarters. I should like to make a similar recommendation in this instance also.

Rest House.

There is one mosquito-room. It is in good order. There are two tanks, both mosquito-proof. I should strongly recommend the erection of a good latrine here.

Station Master's Quarters.

These are good and are well-kept.

Clerks' Quarters.

These are good and well-kept with the exception of the latrine system. These are not supplied with pans. Each uses his own chamber and the faeces are thrown into a hole quite close to the quarters. I should recommend that this system be discontinued.

I have &c.,

J. M. L. BROWN,
Medical Officer.

Resumption of Duty.

William West, Jnr., Pupil, Land and Survey Department, returned from leave of absence and resumed duty on the 23rd of February.

Street may be relieved a little. I should like to draw your attention to the very unsatisfactory small doors of all land latrines, the hinges of which keep breaking away through rust, if doors as recommended in my last Annual Report were only substituted, I feel sure all trouble with them would be ended.

Ereko Meat Market has been renovated throughout, the pump-well put in order, some blocks of wood still remain to be supplied Streets.

Alakoro Canal is being cleared of rubbish by the Sanitary Engineer and I believe is to be filled in with sand. I have several times reported the swampy state of several Streets, which are still the same.

I have had to inform the Sanitary Engineer, of materials left in the Public Street by his workmen for long periods after completing certain works.

Drains.

Those fissured drains mentioned in my previous reports are still in the same condition.

Dust-bins.

The unsatisfactory state of many of these "foundations" as previously reported to you on several occasions, still exists, nor has the bin at Idunagbo been replaced yet.

Wells.

The pump of the well at Faji Market reported to you in last month's report, is not yet in working order. The well in Great Bridge Street is badly fissured.

Notices.

36 written notices were served during the month for various nuisances, of which number 22 were complied with, 10 not complied, and 4 time unexpired. There were 7 prosecutions (one under Vaccination Ordinance), and five more are pending (one under Vaccination Ordinance). The prosecutions were frequently adjourned thus necessitating many attendances at Court. House to house inspection was done daily throughout the District.

Sanitary Inspector Oduntan resumed duty on the 22nd.

Small Pox Hospital.

No case of Small-pox in the Hospital or admitted during the month. One cases of Varicella remained from October and was discharged cured. One case of Varicella was admitted and still remains in Hospital.

WEDNESDAY, 14TH JUNE, 1905.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Lagos, 12th June, 1905.

His Excellency the Governor directs the publication for general information of the subjoined Memorandum relative to an additional note on the Etiology of Yellow Fever published by Drs. Reed, Carroll and Agramonte of the United States Army.

By Command

E. A. SPEED,

Acting Colonial Secretary.

In view of cases of Yellow Fever having occurred in Togoland and Dahomey and of the occurrence of a case at Dakar, His Excellency the Governor considers it advisable to draw attention to an additional note on the Etiology of Yellow Fever published by Drs. Reed, Carroll and Agramonte of the United States Army, and forwarded for the information of this Government by the Secretary of State in his despatch No. 185 of the 20th of June, 1901.

The note details experiments carried out which are claimed to have established the "Conclusions" set out below. Briefly the experiments were as follows:—

They were carried out in a specially isolated camp, with the full consent of the men experimented on. Of five men first selected for experiment four developed yellow fever after being bitten by mosquitoes (that had previously been allowed to bite a person suffering from the disease) within the period of incubation of the disease. The failure in the fifth case is attributed to the disease not having developed in the insect used. These experiments were carried out in November and December. The epidemic having ceased in December, 1900, no other case of yellow fever occurred in the camp until an infected mosquito was allowed to bite another occupant. This man also developed yellow fever. Various further experiments were carried out to endeavour to produce yellow fever by means of contact with, and wearing of, clothing soiled with the excreta or fomites from yellow fever patients. No disease could be developed in this way; but it was produced by the subcutaneous injection of blood taken from yellow fever patients.

CONCLUSIONS.

1. The mosquito—S. fasciata—serves as the intermediate host for the parasite of yellow fever.
2. Yellow fever is transmitted to the non-immune individual by means of the bite of a mosquito that has previously fed on the blood of those sick with this disease.
3. An interval of about 12 days or more after contamination appears to be necessary before the mosquito is capable of conveying the infection.

Northern Nigerian Caravan Trade.

The following Extract from a recent Belgian publication is published for general information :

Part Translation of Mr. C. de Ceulener's Book: "Protectorats Anglais du Niger."

"CARAVANS AND LOCAL TRADE.

The inhabitants of the left bank of the Niger are not only good farmers, trained agriculturalists, and excellent cattle breeders, but they are also clever and experienced traders.

The markets of the Hausa countries have the reputation of being always exceedingly animated, and have fairly earned their reputation as the most important of the African continent.

The caravan trade has of late very quickly increased (¹): and its development is the natural consequence of the efforts made by the authorities to check the systems of brigandage from which the country has so long suffered.

It is, indeed, no less than extraordinary that this caravan trade, in spite of all the dangers and difficulties to which it was exposed towards the end of the Fulani rule, should have remained as important as it did.

This actual prosperity will always be increasing, now that the obstacles of the past have been swept away.

At almost all seasons of the year, the Hausa countries are inter-penetrated in every direction by a multitude of caravans, which are either on their way to swell the great markets of the Mediterranean and Atlantic coasts, or on their return journey to maintain the prosperity of those of the left bank of the Niger.

These caravans can be divided into two principal classes, those of the Export and those of the Import trade.

The former are both the more important and the more numerous. They assemble in the Hausa countries, on the left bank of the Niger: and they follow two chief routes, of which Yega is the point of junction: According to the report of M.M. Buret and Desamblanc to the Anglo-Belgian Society, their itineraries may be described as follows:

The first route crosses the Bornu and the Gober, and passes by way of Sokoto, Gando, and Yega.

The second follows the Kano route, crosses the Zamphara, and rejoins the first road at Yega.

From this last place, the caravans aim for Daki N'Gari, at which point they separate, some of them taking the way by Bakindi, Gomba, and Kawoge, while the others, which are generally the more important, take the road to Ilo.

At this point, again, a new division takes place, one part, the greater, proceeding to Kandi, in Dahomey, and the other, the lesser part, to Kawoge, to rejoin the caravans which are coming from Daki N'Gari, by way of Bakindi and Gomba.

(1) [Note. The caravan trade to Lagos appears to be decreasing.]

From Kandi, they go to Kuande, by two different ways, the one leading by Boyay, Nikki, and Djougou, and the other by Banikura, Kuande, and Djougou.

When they have arrived at this last place, the caravans once more sub-divide themselves into small groups, which sell their produce at the markets of Semere-Bafilo and Kontoum, from which the merchants proceed to Salaga and Krakje, via Sogoday, Fassougou, or Bassari-Yendi.

Certain of the caravans also take, alternatively, the route from Kuande to Sansanne-Mango, Salaga, or Krakje, through Yendi, crossing the Kafiri country from East to West.

At Salaga or Krakje, the caravans break up altogether: and from these places the traders prosecute their journeys individually, either to the ports of the Atlantic coast or to the markets for kola-nuts.

The caravans passing through Kawoge go to Bassaro, where they divide into two parts, one of which takes the road to Ilorin, and the other proceeds directly to Lagos through Iseyin.

Speaking now, of the caravans which travel to the Mediterranean coast to sell their produce, they follow, generally, one of the two following routes:—

- (1.) The road via Kano, Zinler, Agades, Asben, Ghat, Gadames (or Mourzouk), and Tripoli.
- (2.) That via Kouka, Barroua, Bilma, Tummo, Mourzouk, Sokna, or Misda, and Tripoli.

The length of time which it takes to cross the Sahara varies from 8 to 11 months, according to the season, and to the importance of the caravan.

For caravans journeying to the Southwards, the animals employed for transport are usually donkeys: while for those which are going North camels are preferred, these animals alone being of any use in crossing the desert.

Coming now to Import Caravans, these are less numerous than the other class, and come, almost, without exception, from the Mediterranean coast. Those of them which start from the South are usually composed of the remains of Export Caravans, and travel in small groups of returning traders. As their transport animals have usually been sold on the coast, they are obliged to use Gambaris as carriers.

If the caravans directing themselves to the Mediterranean coast are less numerous than those which proceed to the Bay of Benin and the Atlantic, they are, on the other hand, of greater size and importance. This is due to the fact that the dangers, as well as the very great length, of the journey across the Sahara, oblige them to unite in large bodies, for purposes of mutual protection and assistance. The routes to the North are far from presenting the same advantages as do those to the South: and when France has succeeded in clearing the desert of the hordes of Tuareg brigands which still infest it, the trade with the West Coast will perhaps become as considerable and as prosperous as the more ancient commerce with the Mediterranean ports.

Indeed, the very fact that, since the occupation of the French territories which lie to the North of the English sphere of influence, the traffic with the ports of the Mediterranean coast has greatly increased, is, in itself, rightly considered, a proof of the above contention.

France spares no sacrifices to attract into her territory caravans coming from the Hausa countries: and such caravans, while in the English Protectorate they are forced to pay a special duty for each several province traversed, to the amount of 5% of the value of the goods (with a maximum, it is true, of 15%), in the French territories adjacent have no duty at all to pay, and the only formality required consists in a declaration for statistical purposes, for which no fee is charged.

However, it remains to see what will be the effect on the caravan traffic of the establishment of European factories in the interior, and of the construction of the numerous lines of railway which are now no more than projected.

It is probable that, rather than run the risks of a long and troublesome journey, the natives will prefer to bring their produce to the new factories, where they will have every facility to sell or to exchange them for European manufactures. But this only the future can shew.

However that may be, at the present time, the traffic actually carried on with the coast is of considerable importance; and to get some idea of it one has only to travel up one of the routes followed by the caravans from the Haussa countries. The sight of one of these at once makes it possible to form a rapid impression of the great quantity of produce sent every year to the great markets of the coast by the industry of the North.

At certain times, chiefly towards the end of the rainy season, the movement begins; and then all the narrow paths leading to the ports of the coast are filled with almost unending processions of cattle, horses, donkeys, and heavy-laden Gambaris, all of them labouring and sweating under the weights of enormous loads of miscellaneous merchandize.

Formerly, they were always escorted by a certain number of horse and foot men, armed to the teeth, to ensure them against possible attacks from the banditti on the way.

At the successive villages, or more usually, perhaps, in the vicinity of a water-hole, or of one of the occasional small rivers, regular rest-houses, or khans, are established, where men and animals find some rest. All around the small peaked straw thatched huts, into which the only entry is on all-fours, are the kraals for the cattle. During the night each man has to keep watch in his turn, while his fellows are either sleeping close-packed together in the far from spacious huts, or chattering at their ease round a great bonfire, with their heads carefully wrapped up for protection against the chilly blasts of the Harmattan.

The death-rate amongst the animals is often very heavy, on account of the want of food or water, or from sheer over-fatigue. The stages of the march are numerous, sometimes very hard and long, and it is usually in a very exhausted and harassed condition, quite spent and at the end of their forces, that the poor brutes arrive at their destination.

Although the caravans have often an opportunity to sell all their produce on the way down, it is a curious fact that the men in charge are never in a hurry to accept the propositions made to them, and that they prefer to sell only on the coast. This is due to the fact that the natives, before starting from the places of production, reckon up their expected profit before-hand, and apportion it in advance among the different purchases which they intend to make on the coast. For them, time has no value. It is enough for any one of them to know that he starts with produce to a certain amount, and expects to return with so many pieces of such-and-such a sort of cotton-goods, with so many strings of a particular kind of beads, with so many cutlasses of a certain pattern, and with a required quantity of kolanuts. It is of no importance to him that he shall get back earlier or later. As to that he does not care, provided that his intended purchases have been profitably secured.

The real advantage to the trader, then, in establishing new factories up-country, is to be looked for in establishing them actually on the markets, in the producing countries, that is, of the interior, where he will have the best opportunity to exchange his imported goods for the raw produce or for the native manufactured articles he requires.

The chief problem for the trader thus evidently becomes that of transport. But of transport he has almost an embarrassing choice. Carriers are procurable in more than sufficient quantity; manual labour is cheap. If he wishes for an increased profit, he will, instead of using porters, employ the available beasts of burden, which are very suitable to his purpose. The oxen, horses, and donkeys, are, to begin with, in themselves valuable commodities, and are besides of an excellent stamp for transport work. If they are managed carefully and with knowledge, and if the season and the route for their journey to the coast be well chosen, animal pack-transport is far cheaper than, and consequently far preferable to, carriage by rail.

There is also, it is true, the river-route. But to use this way entails the possession of a large number of canoes; and the trader always runs the risk of having his goods spoilt, or even totally lost, in the passage of the rapids: while, on the other hand, it must not be forgotten that, by combining a trade in cattle with that in native produce, the cost of transport, usually, of course, reckoned as a loss, can be actually saved. This is due to the facts of the local conditions prevailing. For an ox or a horse, for example, which beyond the Niger can be bought for a song, is of considerable selling value on the coast. Both these animals, which are very numerous in the North, are scarcely to be procured at all at the coastal settlements, where the cattle supply a source of health-giving nourishment of which the European stands greatly in need, while horses are readily purchased by the white man for purposes of business or recreation.

If the travelling season and the route be carefully chosen, the animals will find all along the way food in abundance and water in sufficient quantity. And, in addition, good management would cause a heavy decrease in the death-rate, which is so high only because the natives take no care at all of their animals. For the tsetse fly is unknown both on the Niger and in the hinterland of the West Coast Colonies.

As for the conductors for the transport-animals, no class of people could be found better fitted than the Fulanis, who are naturally a pastoral people, and exceptionally good horsemen. One of them is sufficient to herd and drive 100 head of cattle, his wages being £1. 10. 0 to £2. 0. 0 per journey. For this price one is certain to procure a good and reliable man, provided that he can be inspired with a full confidence in his employer, which is an essential point.

The climate of the countries on the left bank of the Upper Niger being admirably suitable for cattle-breeding, the proposed factories could very properly interest themselves on their own account in the industry. There is plenty of pasture, and the out-goings would be very small. The existing breeds of cattle are of fine appearance, and of remarkable strength. Consequently, the animals could be used for traction purposes, especially as the country is naturally adapted to the use of wheeled vehicles. Roads could be easily made, for the bush is very open, and the work of construction would be simple, in view of the short duration of the rainy season. Maintenance would be cheap, for the same reason. And material is available on the spot.

Navigation on the Niger is as cheap as transport by land, and it is easy to find excellent canoe-men in the villages along the river-banks. These men know the river in its most intimate windings, and dare the dangers of the rapids with intrepidity and success. Unfortunately, the weak point is their canoes, which are not only too heavy, but of the most primitive construction. It is almost impossible to use them in carrying valuable goods, which would probably arrive entirely spoiled by the water.

It remains now for us to examine the different sorts of produce and goods which are the chief articles of local trade, and those exported or imported by the caravans.

LIVE STOCK.

The most important item is cattle, especially horned cattle, which are the chief resource of Hausa-land. Every year the caravans despatch countless herds towards the coastal centres, where they are destined chiefly for consumption as food. Besides oxen, they bring also sheep, horses, and large numbers of donkeys, which are the chief means of transport.

These animals, which are purchased at low prices up-country, are sold very dear on the coast. A young bullock, in good condition, usually costs a maximum of £3 in the markets of Yega and Argounou; at Ilo the price varies from £1. 8. 0 to £3 minimum, according to its age and size. These same beasts are sold in the market at Lagos at a minimum price of from £8 to £10, if of medium size; the smallest are worth about £4.

The price of horses varies from £4 to £7, to fetch up to £25 in Lagos. (2). The price of donkeys runs from £1 to £1. 10. 0. On the coast, £3 to £4.

Sheep are exceedingly cheap, and can be purchased in great quantities at a price of from 3/- to 10/- per head. In Lagos, it is often difficult to get one for less than £1, and they sometimes cost even more.

If one reckons up all the salient facts together, viz.:—that there are no expenses on the journey down at all, except the wages of the conductors; that the animals are employed with pack-saddles on their journey for the transport of merchandize; that they are of an unusual fecundity; and that they are in constant demand on the coast; we may come to the conclusion that the cattle-trade is one which can be ventured on with the best chances of success.

Besides the above-mentioned animals, the natives devote themselves also to the breeding of camels, which render them invaluable services in the transport of goods from the markets of the North to the Mediterranean coast. The prices of camels at Ilo is £10, but higher up in the interior the average price is from £4 to £8.

MOROCCO TANNED AND DYED SKINS.

The export of Morocco leather by caravan is of extraordinary importance. The number of those skins passing every year through Yega is estimated, at the lowest, at 400,000 pieces, and the English Consul in Tripoli reported, in 1903, that a single caravan had brought to that city one thousand loads, representing a value of about £24,000.

The Morocco leather sold on the coast of Tripoli comes almost entirely from the Hausa country; and the trade in this article is as active with the West Coast as with the Mediterranean.

The red-dyed skins, the price of which runs from 3d. a piece upwards in Yega, fetch 2/- and 2/3 in the Lagos market.

These leathers are of the very first quality, very well prepared, and artistically dyed. They are usually yellow, green, or red, the red being most in demand.

Besides leathers, the caravans export also articles manufactured of Morocco leather, such as sandals, boots, saddlery, wallets, etc.

OSTRICH SKINS AND FEATHERS.

The trade in ostrich feathers and skins is not yet of great importance, and only the natives of the border countries of the Western frontier devote much attention to this industry.

Exports are usually directed to the Mediterranean coast, and it is seldom that these products are sent by the Southern route. The caravan mentioned above brought to Tripoli, besides its Morocco leather and ivory, 200 loads of feathers, of the estimated value of £16,000.

Three years ago, the greater part of the natives were not acquainted with the market value or with the utility of the feathers which they carried for sale to Tripoli, or which the Arabs of that town came to purchase from them. The opening of Northern Nigeria to European trade will probably encourage the inhabitants of the country to pay attention to the rearing of the ostrich, which is very abundant in the neighbouring desert regions. It is probable, also, that part of the trade in feathers will take the direction of the South, to the prejudice of the Northern caravan-trade. Before the English occupation, ostrich-skins were sold at from 12/- to £1 each, according to the length, colour, and beauty of the plumes. At that time, a live bird of ordinary size could be bought in the N. W. of Nigeria for about £1.

IVORY.

This produce is only exported in small quantities, and comes from the Lake Tchad region or from Dendi and Gourma. Its value is very little understood by the up-country natives, and its price stands at about 1/- a pound at Ilo.

NATIVE CLOTHS.

The native-manufactured cloths are an important article of export both by the Northward and the Southward-bound caravans. These cloths come chiefly from Kano, which makes a speciality of their manufacture; but only cloths of good quality and embroidered pieces are exported. Very often, too, the caravans carry made-up garments, consisting chiefly of Arab dresses, (gandourahs). The native cloths are always expensive; and the pieces, the measurements of which does not exceed an ordinary page, fetch up to 12/-, 15/- and often more.

These are the principal products usually exported by caravan. Imported goods are more varied, and consist chiefly of Kola-nuts, salt, potash, cotton-goods, paper, caps, guns, beads, gun-powder, needles, thread, matches, pipes, knives, swords, rods, fezzes, looking-glasses, and different small articles like perfumery and confectionary.

KOLA-NUTS.

Amongst the above-mentioned articles, Kola-nuts are the most important, and are annually imported into the Hausa countries in considerable quantities. This product is one highly valued in these countries, and is also much sought after as an article of exchange. The Kola-nut trade is carried on solely with the Atlantic coast, and more especially with the market of Salaga, (Gold Coast). From this town caravans travel to Kano, via Ilo, Changakoy, and Sokoto, with the object of exchanging, at Kano, their Kola-nuts for Hausa manufactured articles, such as native cloths and Morocco leather, and also for salt, potash, and cattle.

The caravans returning up-country from Lagos import, too, large quantities of Kola-nuts, but these are nuts which come for the most part from the Gold Coast, the Yoruba production not being sufficient to supply both the local consumption and the trade with the North. The nuts are usually packed, in quantities of from two to three thousand, in bales of strong matting, lined inside with fresh leaves in order to keep the produce as fresh as possible.

These leaves are repeatedly renewed on the way, and the merchants take every precaution in their power that the nuts shall dry as little as possible, and in that way shall retain their value.

For the transport of Kola-nuts, donkeys are used, and the load for each animal is computed on the average at from 5000 to 6000 nuts.

There are two kinds of Kola-nuts, easily distinguishable from each other by their colour, the one being of a creamy white, the other of a rose-violet. The latter is the most in demand, because it keeps better than the white variety, which, however, is the better in quality. The nuts, though relatively dear on the coast, reach very high prices in the hinterland, and the trade in them is one of the most profitable carried on, a fact due to the enormous quantities required for the consumption of the natives of the left bank of the Niger. The nuts bought in Lagos at about 1/3 or 1/6 a hundred are ordinarily sold at 6/6 at Kano. In the market at Ilo they are sold in retail, at 2d. or 3d. each.

SALT AND POTASH.

Both these products are of great value in the trade with the countries of the Middle Niger. The salt imported comes principally from Dalol Fogha, and the potash comes originally from Minau and the country to the N. W. of Lake Tchad.

The salt is of very inferior quality, and contains a large proportion of impurities. It is found on the market under the form of small cylinders called "lingues", the length of which is from 30 to 40 centimeters by a diameter of 10 centimeters, and which are packed in matting bales tied with large thongs. These bales or packages are of different weights, from 2 lbs to 35 lbs; and the price varies from 5d. to 1/3 per lb, according to purity. The lingues of 700 grs. sell usually for 3d.

Potash is sold in blocks, lumps, or pounded; and costs in Kano about £18. 13. 0. per English ton, in blocks, or only £4. 16. 0. to £6. 14. 0. in pulverized pieces or powder. In Zaria the price is £24: in Bida and Lokoja, £42. A large quantity of potash passes in transit through Northern Nigeria, and reaches the markets of the coast of Benin, where it is highly appreciated by the natives. Sometime ago it was sold in Lagos at from £50 to £60 a ton; but now the price has fallen to £40.

COTTON GOODS.

The article best suited for sale in the Hausa market is the English "baft", which sells in the Lagos stores at prices of from 4/6 to 5/- a piece of 12 yards, for fair quality; and the price per piece at Ilo reaches £1. or £1. 5. 0. Blue striped cotonnades, with brocades, silks, and velvets, are also in demand, and a great variety of other fabrics are also sold in the markets of Northern Nigeria, especially cotonnades. But none of them are in such demand as the "baft".

THREAD.

The thread imported by the caravans on their return from the coast is usually of coarse quality, bleached or unbleached, and the price is 6d or 7d for one hank or packet.

NEEDLES.

The most required sort is the needle of ordinary quality, and of middle size and thickness, sold at about half-penny each.

FEZ CAPS.

Fezzes are very widely used. Only the red ones are required in the Hausa markets: sold at about 5/- each.

PAPER.

The article preferred is a paper of coarse quality, which the caravans buy usually on the Mediterranean coast, whither it is imported from Italy. The Hausa merchants are well acquainted with this kind of paper, which has a special water-mark showing three moons, and they are reluctant to buy any other quality. This paper is sold in quarto sheets, at from 2d to 3d each.

MATCHES.

The Swedish safety-matches are most in demand. They are sold by retail in the stores at Lagos in packets of ten boxes for 2d or 3d, while in Ilo a single box brings 1½d or 2d.

KNIVES.

The imported knives are of different shapes, and fetch relatively high prices in Northern Nigeria. Pocket-knives sell at 2/- or 2/6 each; those which do not shut up, at 1/- to 1/3. "Matchets," or cutlasses, which have a value of from 9d to 1/-, (retail prices), on the coast, are sold at Ilo market at 2/- or 2/6 each (3).

SWORDS.

This article is very appreciated, especially old yatagans, or old army sabre-bayonets.

GUNS.

Importation of any but the flint-lock "dane guns" is forbidden; but before the English occupation great quantities of arms of precision were imported from the North.

The price of these dane-guns, which is only 10/- to 15/- in Lagos, is about 30/- to 35/- in Ilo. Those the butt-end of which is ornamented with brass nails are considerably more valuable than the others.

GUN-POWDER.

This is of very low quality: and fetches from 12/- to 15/- a lb in Northern Nigeria.

BEADS.

The demand is always constant on the Hausa markets, and, of all imported goods, it is the one which gives the most profit. The value up-country is increased by from 400 to 500%.

The caravans of the North import chiefly beads and coral ornaments.

TOBACCO PIPES.

The varnished clay pipe has a monopoly of the markets of the Middle Niger. The trade in this article also, is very profitable, and the average price is 6d each.

COPPER.

Brass rods are much required by the Hausas for industrial purposes. Their measurements are about one meter in length by 4 or 5 m/m in diameter. Such a rod is sold usually for 10/-.

SUGAR.

Sugar is imported chiefly from the Mediterranean, especially from Tripoli and Egypt. It is of poor quality, and fetches about 1/- a pound.

PERFUMERY.

Perfumes also come usually from the Mediterranean coast, and the most part of them are manufactured in the East. Their quality is often better than that of perfumes coming from the West Coast markets, and accordingly the prices are higher.

OTHER ARTICLES.

The other articles imported by the caravans, such as looking-glasses, Mohamedan chaplets, amulets, head-ornaments, spices, etc., which are to be found in the Hausa markets, are of less importance and deserve little attention.

The market at Ilo being the only one where I have had an opportunity of making exact investigations, the prices above-mentioned are those prevailing in Ilo. Of course, the quotations of the merchants on the left bank of the Niger are higher, so far as imported goods are concerned. On the other hand the prices of export produce are affected in the inverse ratio, and tend to diminish, to an extent, however, varying very much as between one locality and another.

Nevertheless, my figures will allow those interested to form an approximate idea of the values of the different import and export goods which are on the Hausa markets. At the same time, it is necessary to remember that these countries were not yet opened to European trade when I travelled across to the Niger. Possibly, therefore, some of these prices have altered in the interval.

CONCLUSION.

The Protectorates of Northern and Southern Nigeria can still be ranked amongst the few new countries in which Europe has some chance to find a good market for her commerce. The revocation of the Charter granted in 1885 to the Royal Niger Company has abolished the monopoly enjoyed by this Company for about fifteen years, and opened to the commerce of all nations, under conditions of absolute equality, these vast countries, which still remained unexplored so lately as 1902.

They are, even to-day, very little opened-up; and trade has remained confined, in the South, until quite recently, to the banks of the Niger and its tributaries.

In the year 1901, the most northern factory of the Royal Niger Company was situated at Leaba, near the rapids of Wuru: and, as for the territories of the Middle Niger, the "Societe Anglo-Belge d' Exploitations Commerciales et Agricoles" of Lagos was the only trading company which had penetrated, up to that date, into the interior in order to enter into business relations with the natives and to establish trading factories.

This enterprise, which promised the most brilliant results, has been given up in consequence of a combination of unforeseen and unfortunate circumstances.

Our trade with the Congo Free State has created in Belgium several new industries able to supply the our colonial trade with products which can enter into a keen competition with those exported by England, Germany, and France to their respective colonial possessions.

However, the share of our country in the trade with other parts of the African continent is as yet non-existent;—a fact due to the want of initiative of our manufacturers and traders.

It cannot be admitted that a country like ours (*), full of capital, possessing numerous and varied industries, and where manual labour is super-abundant and very cheap, could not enter advantageously into competition with the other Great Powers in the field of colonial trade.

The pacification and occupation of the Protectorates of the Niger have opened to European trade a new and vast field for its activity: and Belgium must necessarily give the matter her serious consideration, especially in view of her great facilities of communication with these countries, which are on the route of her steamship line from Antwerp to the Congo.

The whole of M. de Ceulener's able though inaccurate pamphlet, of which the above excerpt is a small portion, deserves attention,
